NOTE Photoshop is extremely powerful and a tool that requires a lot of study to fully understand and master. If you don't have time to learn Photoshop, purchase a photo editing program that incorporates a built-in, powerful, and fast raster image editor. Photoshop has some built-in, very useful features, such as the following: * Masking (a feature that enables you to edit an image, such as changing the color of an object) * Adjustment layers (built-in Photoshop adjustment tools that enable you to control the brightness and contrast of an image) * Layers (modifiers you can use to manipulate an image) * Keying (a tool for automating layers by using masks) * Filters (built-in Photoshop filters that enhance an image) * Type tools * Text tools (create text on a layer, including character alignment) * Vector tools (build an image layer by layer, such as vector images or drawings) * Color spaces (create color spaces that allow you to adjust color temperature and tint) * Camera raw (built-in tool for creating JPEG files from RAW files, such as Nikon D3, D700, and D5100 files) * Camera calibration (built-in tool for improving and calibrating camera settings and exposure) * Motion blur (create a blurry background with moving objects by overlaying a blur filter on a layer) * Lens corrections (built-in tool for improving the quality of images taken using a specific lens) * Image repair (built-in tool for identifying and repairing raster images) The tools that Photoshop includes are some of the best in the industry, and the new addition to Photoshop CS6, Content-Aware Move, provides the most powerful content-aware tool available in any software program. You can find out more about Content-Aware Move in Chapter 12. The following list of Photoshop features can be used to achieve specific effects and goals: * Lighting: Create a sparkle, highlight, or shadow with Dodge and Burn tools. * Vignette: Create a halo effect around objects or the image as a whole with Vignette tools. * Curves: Create a luminance range in your image with the Curves tools. * Levels: Create a brightness or contrast range with

PS Elements is a shareware application. In the other words, it will be free to use for a limited time. The software license will expire after 1, 3, or 5 years, and it will no longer be able to be used after that period. Photoshop is one of the most popular image editing software in the world. Its features are used to create slideshows, comics, poster designs, and fashion looks for web and print. It is also used in web design, graphic design, illustration and creation of animation. In this Photoshop tutorial, we will teach you how to use tools in Photoshop and how to save or export your images. Then, we will explain how to change color in Photoshop and apply color filter effects. How to open Photoshop in Mac OS X There are two ways to start Photoshop in Mac OS X El Capitan: 1. Open Photoshop using Photoshop.app Open Photoshop with the Photoshop.app application that is installed by default on Mac OS X El Capitan. Start Photoshop with the Photoshop app If you want to open Photoshop, you need to find the application from the Applications folder that is displayed on the desktop. In the Finder, press Command+Space bar to show the "Search window." Type "Photoshop" or click on the Photoshop icon (.psd file extension) on the Finder window to open Photoshop.app. Click on Photoshop to start the application. This method of launching Photoshop from the Finder is a safe and convenient way to start Photoshop with a single click. 2. Open Photoshop directly from Finder.app Start Photoshop directly from Finder.app, the default apps installer on Mac OS X. If you have never started Photoshop with the Finder before, go to the Applications folder and open Finder.app. The applications installer will be listed as Photoshop.app. Click on this icon to launch Photoshop. Start Photoshop with Finder.app One way to find the Applications folder is to go to the Finder menu and click on "Go" > "Go to Folder." Another way to open Finder.app is to click on the Finder icon on the dock. In the Finder window, select "Applications" to open the Applications folder. If you want to open Photoshop directly, make sure you have the Photoshop.app application already installed on your 05a79cecff

— A recent community survey of leaders within the East Raleigh community found that the majority of residents oppose a proposal to build a large mixed-use development at the corner of East McDowell Road and South New Hope Road. Of the 91 surveys that were submitted, nearly 50 percent of respondents, including 71 percent of Democrats, 46 percent of Republicans and 71 percent of unaffiliated voters, indicated that they do not favor the development. There was one exception, a Republican supporter of the development, who said she felt very strongly that the project was needed to build in the area. Among the key issues that the East Raleigh community said they did not support were: The inappropriate scale of the proposed project The increase in traffic and noise in the area The loss of natural green space The impact on the homes that currently exist in the neighborhood These responses are in contrast to recent surveys that have found strong support for the proposal. For example, in April 2014, the a Raleigh-based youth group that represents high school students in the East Wake Community Coalition sent out an online survey to ask students in grades K-5 about the proposal. The survey found that most respondents, 69 percent of survey takers, thought the project would be a good addition to the area. In addition, a recent paper that was issued by the East Raleigh Citizens Coalition found that about 70 percent of residents are in favor of the project. On June 13, the community survey results were presented at an East Raleigh Neighborhood Association meeting. The neighborhood association is organized under the ERC Coalition, which was created in 2012 to represent the needs of the neighborhood. Approximately 90 people attended the meeting, many of whom were residents of the East Raleigh community. The results were met with a mix of reactions. Most people said that they support the East Raleigh project, but were not pleased with the amount of traffic that will flow in and out of the area. Most respondents said that they were against the project because the scale was inappropriate for the area, with about 50 percent saying that the project was too big and too tall, while the rest said that they felt it was too big for the space it would occupy. Other major concerns among community members were about the loss of natural green space, the increase in traffic, crime and whether the development will help or hurt the neighborhood. Again, many people agreed with the proposal, with about 70 percent of respondents saying that they believed the development was an improvement to the neighborhood. Some attendees at the

Q: Is In-App Facebook Authentication Safe? I am building an android application that uses Facebook login for users to enter their phone number and they will get a code via text message. Then they will type the code to enter the application. My question is: is it safe to ask users to provide their Facebook phone number and to send them codes via text? The application will be free, so the goal is to let users use the application without providing their actual phone number. A: No. Not really, at least not in any useful sense. The problem is that you can't prove any of the things you're doing in any way that verifies they're connected to Facebook. When your users are installing your app, you can generate a unique secret code and send it to your server via some sort of private API. When they enter that code, you can then download their Facebook details from their profiles. But you can't retrieve that data without the user's permissions - so even if you hold the secret code (and you don't, obviously) it's still an open-and-shut case that you've stolen their personal details. The safest (and most common) approach is to ask for their phone number for the purposes of their user experience, and then ask if you can store their phone number, or alternatively just obtain it directly from Facebook.
