According to the Microsoft Store, that version is currently on sale for $49.99 (99¢). You can also download the Microsoft Store version directly from Adobe. If you are looking for a hobbyist program then I recommend Photoshop Express. It's free and can be downloaded directly from Adobe. It's extremely simple and light, but it has most of the features of Photoshop and Photoshop Elements. These are the best photo editing apps for Windows. Best Photoshop and Photoshop Elements Alternatives for Windows Click on any of the image to go directly to the app's Amazon page and product comparison. 1. Acorn The Acorn app comes from a company called Acornsoft, which was acquired by Eset in 2016. Acorn is their image editing app for Windows 10 PCs, Mac and Android devices. This program allows you to edit files with layers and can do some of the basic Photoshop features. Also, many companies and individuals use it as a free basic image editor that comes with their software. Pros: Provides free basic image editing and Photoshop features. Cons: Microsoft doesn't allow the source code to be published. 2. Kodak Kodak is a free photo editing app for Windows 10 PCs and Macs that you can download directly from Kodak. This program includes features such as cropping, auto-enhancements, filters, cutout effects and basic Photoshop editing features. Pros: Free – non-commercial use only. Cons: Low quality automatic editing and no programmable features. 3. JEPGripper The JEPGripper app is a simple and free photo editing tool. Although it has basic editing tools like cropping and contrast, it doesn't have all the features in Photoshop. However, you can make very professional-looking images. Pros: Free. Cons: No high-quality photo editing features. 4. PhotoPad Studio PhotoPad Studio is a free graphics editor for Windows 10 and macOS. It contains many common photo editing tools and can make graphics for social media sites and blogs. Pros: Free. Cons: Lacking advanced editing and graphic creation features. 5. FotoMagico This simple photo editing app from FotoMag 05a79cecf

An Australian pediatric oncologist looking for an opportunity to start his own company has scored his dream job: a chance to be named CEO of the world's second-largest biotech firm. After a brief stint as the CEO of a computer consulting firm and an attempt to change careers as a cardiac surgeon, Dr. David McCauley, 34, took the helm at Amgen in 2007 after selling his stake in the company. After 14 years, he has left at a time when the biotech industry has lost some of its stature and lost its way, due to consolidation, pharmaceutical companies moving into biologics, and investors pulling out of the industry. "The industry has changed," says McCauley, who will take the helm at the company on Aug. 1. "We're changing from being a company to being an innovation engine." McCauley, who continues to lead as chief technology officer, says Amgen needs to build a new business model based on "intelligent research and education." He doesn't plan on building massive new factories and is instead more focused on computer modeling and biology. "When people see the power of new science, they have to say, 'Why haven't I thought of that?'" Amgen has five core areas that McCauley will strive to drive innovation and spend most of the company's energy on. The new CEO wants to develop a new class of cancer drugs called bispecific antibodies, an area that McCauley has been working on since his days as CEO. He also wants to accelerate the clinical development of predictive medicine technologies, as well as in vivo imaging agents that would help doctors diagnose and treat disease. This month, the company is launching a new effort to develop new ways to treat autoimmune diseases. McCauley, who says he sees immense potential for Amgen to change the world, says his biggest regret is that he sold his stake in the company. The new CEO is leaving with almost two decades of Amgen under his belt. "I never planned on selling my stake," he says. "When you sell your stake, you sell out and you can never come back." McCauley, who is a pediatric oncologist, attended Harvard Medical School, did his residency at Stanford and has a private practice in Los Angeles. Having spent the past 14 years at Amgen, he says the hours he put in paled in comparison to the hard work he did at his tech

Officials investigating apparent police brutality in Birmingham on Saturday say they have found evidence of two different groups of officers attacking protesters. Officers are understood to have singled out a group of predominantly male protesters, "locking them up" and beating some, before switching to dealing with a group of predominantly female protesters later in the afternoon. Several of those arrested were taken to hospital to be treated for hypothermia. Witnesses said that at least seven women were arrested at about 2pm on Saturday, while several men were arrested about an hour later, before officers were seen singling out groups of protesters from the crowd to physically arrest and remove. A group of two or three officers attacked a group of five or six black men arrested for mainly sitting down and refusing to move from a main road in the north of the city. One of the men was alleged to have been arrested and taken to hospital, but the other eight were said to have been released immediately. One officer is understood to have been struck repeatedly with an "object" by a woman as she lay on the ground and another is reported to have been bitten by a woman. The police are understood to have been joined by a group of about 20 other officers with dogs, a side car and the lights and sirens on. One protester is understood to have been bitten on the arms by police dogs. Paramedics were on standby and the crowd began to separate, with several of the women who were arrested leaving the scene and two of the officers are understood to have been seen running away from the scene. Demonstrators poured into the streets in protest after Birmingham city centre was closed to traffic during the day, including a demonstration in front of Birmingham police HQ. The IPCC said it had been informed of the incident and was investigating. It has been reported that eyewitnesses have told the IPCC that they saw a group of police officers launch themselves at a group of women protesters, including striking one protester in the face. The women then allegedly fled to a nearby police station where they called the ambulance service. A police spokesman told the Guardian that two groups of protesters had been arrested. "A number of officers were deployed with dogs to the area when this group came into the cordon. They claimed to be protesters and refused to follow police instructions. They were arrested on suspicion of obstructing the highway. A second group, also male, linked to another cause, were arrested on suspicion of obstruction and public order offences
