I can't do something like this... class A { constructor(a) { this.a = a; } someMethod(a) { return a.type; // error, "a is not a subexpression" } } class B { constructor(a) { this.a = a; } subExpressionType(a) { return a.type // Works, returns type of `a` } } const b = new B(new A("str"));

b.someMethod(b.subExpressionType); // Error: "b.subExpressionType is not a function" I'm trying to find a way to do this with a modifier. Is that possible?
A: ES2015 does not allow conditional operators to be specified as a modifier.
The closest you can get is to use a regular expression based on the subexpression. someMethod(a) { if (/^(?:ConstDecl|Type|Var|Param|Function|Thunk|Module)[^()]\((([^\()]\)|)\).test(a.type)) return a.type; return'string'; }
A: Writing conditional expressions with the conditional operator is one of the rare cases where my jsperf didn't like the standard operator
