To evaluate the ability of a laser-based sensor to detect regional peripheral artery disease (PAD). The study was conducted at a general acute-care hospital. A total of 27 patients undergoing lower-limb vascular surgery were recruited. The presence and severity of disease in each patient's femoropopliteal artery was assessed by means of colour duplex ultrasound. A pulsatile laser Doppler blood flow sensor was applied to the foot dorsum and the ankle to measure transcutaneous blood flow (TcBF), with a second sensor applied to the contralateral foot and ankle as a control to measure nonpulsatile blood flow (NPBF). The initial sensor was applied to the foot after a 1-minute rest period. TcBF measurements

The java documentation indicates that public boolean remove(int index) Deletes the element at the specified position in this collection and returns the element that formerly occupied that position. Does the remove method throws any exception? If yes, what is it? A: An index between 0 and the size()-1 is considered valid (as usual for any Collection): public E remove(int index) { if (index >= size()) { throw new IllegalArgumentException("Index out of bounds"); } else { E result = at(index); removeElementAt(index); return result; } } (the key part is the removal of the element). It returns true if the element was found, false if the index was out of bounds. Throws IllegalArgumentException if index is out of bounds. Q: Why (0 + "") == "0" in javascript? In my code
