If you're interested in Photoshop or Photoshop Elements check out our favorite photo editor! Photoshop & Photoshop Elements are great software products, but they can get extremely expensive if you use them for a few hours per week. All of the features in Photoshop can be accessed via the app for free. You can even make your own custom templates which would be very useful if you want to have customizable photo editing software. You'll still get the same features as if you bought a real copy of Photoshop or Photoshop Elements, but you'll be able to use some of the cost-free features without shelling out any money at all. Our favorite: Customizable templates, which allow you to create your own personalized versions of Photoshop. 13 Best Photo Editing Apps to Edit, Filter and Tweak Photos 1. Snapseed (free) Wondershare Snapseed is a popular alternative to Adobe Photoshop. But unlike Photoshop, it doesn't cost a penny. Snapseed offers a lot of customization options which are available via the app's user interface. It allows you to choose the background color, add text on top, overlay any color and adjust the brightness and contrast of the image. You can even add an artistic filter if you're feeling creative. Snapseed also contains a ton of filters that can be applied to your images. Snapseed is great for editing images without using too many tools. You can use the built-in features to get a professional-looking photo. 2. Photoshop Express (free) Photoshop Express lets you edit photos without having to use Photoshop. If you're having a quick need for a photo edit, Photoshop Express is a great way to go. You can edit the brightness, contrast, saturation, sharpness, add effects like the Wrinkles filter or add a new background. It's only available via the web, but it's a simple app that can be accessed from your phone, tablet or computer. 3. Percutaneous mechanical thrombectomy and urokinase therapy for acute popliteal artery thrombosis. Over a 3-year period, 11 patients with acute popliteal artery thrombosis underwent percutaneous transluminal angioplasty (PTA) and thrombolytic therapy. The clinical presentation was acute ischemic pain (9 patients), acute foot ischemia (1 patient), and subacute claudication (1 patient). Thrombosis was diagnosed by plain film and arteriography. PTA was performed by directional guidewire-assisted balloon angioplasty in 6 patients, directional PTA without guidewire in 3 patients, and directional PTA with subsequent thrombectomy in 2 patients. The overall technical success rate for PTA was 73% (8/11). At 30 days, the ankle-brachial index (ABI) was unchanged in 6 patients (54%), increased from a baseline value of 0.69 to 0.97 (mean, 0.91;  $p = 0.037$ ), and decreased from a baseline value of 0.69 to 0.46 (mean, 0.55;  $p = 0.001$ ) in 5 patients. The mean pain-free walking distance was increased from 143 +/- 139 m at baseline to 313 +/- 213 m after treatment ( $p = 0.034$ ). One patient had a repeat arteriogram 7 weeks after successful PTA, which demonstrated persistent thrombus in the popliteal artery in the same location as the previous arteriogram. This patient was treated successfully by thrombolysis and arteriography, and PTA. We conclude that directional PTA of popliteal artery thrombosis is a safe and effective therapy for limb salvage.
