I am developing a library for my android application where I want to show a panel with the title "Loading..." in the center of the screen when my library is started. After that, I show the details of that library through webview in that panel, but as it takes time for it to load, I want to display the panel with the "Loading..." text in the center of the screen while the library is started and the library details starts loading in that text. How to move the panel with this text in the center of the screen in Android? A: I had the same problem a year ago. Instead of moving the panel with the text, I opted for a text view + image view where I added an indicator view to show that an action is in progress. Click the image to see a full implementation. A: This can be achieved using a Progress Bar and AsyncTask. For more detailed discussion on this, please see these SO posts: android: Progress bar and Async task Android Async task progress dialog Q: Basic question about "lets"
