Mr. Antenori liked to say that his walk-up song was “Bootylicious,” by the girl group TLC, and his dance moves, which he used to show off for the boys at the gym, were “Magnificent Seven.” He also wasn’t a hugger. He was chatty, but he preferred to be heard, not held. He once summed up his life this way: “Are you happy with your kids? If so, life is good. If not, you’ve got to do something about it.” He was born on March 4, 1955, in Mount Pleasant, S.C., the first of five children born to George and Adelaide Antenori. His father had been a garment- and silk-screening businessman and owned a successful fabric and textile business. When the company’s stock market share began to decrease in the late 1980s, the family moved to Edgewater, Fla. “We were all young, energetic, ambitious kids,” he told “Dateline
