Www.rarlokiplocom.com.pl.rar Arsipimage 3.0 Full Version.rar The Evolution of Hack Proof.rar Celebrations.rar 100EXCLUSIVE Interview with Zack Hutton Are you a fan of film? Do you enjoy documentaries? Do you have some of the projects you'd like to show to the world? If so, and if you live in Southern California, then you're in luck. Zack Hutton, Director of Video and Film at the Greater El Cajon Chamber of Commerce, and the creator of DIY Documentaries, will be speaking at the E-City Innovation Fair on October 1st and 2nd. Greater El Cajon is the third largest city in San Diego County, with a population of over 35,000 people. Located in the Southern California region, the Greater El Cajon area is located just north of the town of South El Cajon. The Greater El Cajon Chamber of Commerce also serves three other nearby cities: El Cajon, Santee, and Valley Center. We recently chatted with Zack to find out more about his thoughts on DIY Documentaries, and we were lucky enough to find out a little about him, his personal history, and the inspiration behind his work. How would you define DIY Documentaries? DIY Documentaries are documentaries made without the use of a big budget. Often you'll see indie movies that cost tens of thousands of dollars put out by big studios. Being an indie producer myself, I love and support independent filmmakers and so do many of the voters on the Greater El Cajon Film Commission. Why did you create DIY Documentaries? I created DIY Documentaries as a personal project and as a response to a large studio director that asked for ideas to make a $300,000 documentary. I told him how much it would cost and I offered to make one for him as a free service that he could give to other film commissions. They couldn't afford to do so, but several other film commissions have asked for a DIY Documentary. The plan is to do 3 to 5 videos a year and I will update the website with links to the different DIY Documentaries. I don't claim to be the best DIY Documentarian, but I'm the first to put them out for free and it'
