CSS Frameworks An important part of any web design project is to design and build a website that works in browsers such as Internet Explorer, Firefox, Google Chrome, and Safari. You need to test the front end of a website to ensure that it works in all browsers so that your website stays up-to-date as browsers change and evolve. This is where web developers need to step in and provide a "bridge" between your design and the code so that it works in every browser. They do this by using a Cascading Style Sheet (CSS) framework. These frameworks are browser-specific and enable web designers to create websites that are supported in all browsers. If you're going to build a website, you need to know what's out there to see which one is the most widely supported. These following are the three most commonly used CSS frameworks today: * Skeleton CSS: This is designed to help users create a development environment in which to build websites. It's a Ranitidine-induced acute pneumonitis: no association with the HLA-DQ beta 1*0201 allele. Ranitidine is a histamine-2-receptor antagonist of the pyridine class and used to treat upper gastrointestinal disorders, including peptic ulcer. Recent investigations have shown that ranitidine is capable of provoking allergic reactions (reactive lung disease). Acute ranitidine-induced pneumonitis has been associated with the human leukocyte antigen (HLA)-DQ beta 1*0201 allele; therefore, we investigated whether this allele also explains ranitidine-induced pneumonitis. Thirty-nine patients with moderate-to-severe ranitidine-induced pneumonitis were included in the study. HLA-DQB1 genotyping was performed by polymerase chain reaction-restriction fragment length polymorphism of genomic DNA and the serological genotyping method (SBT/SSO). The most probable DQB1 *0301 allele was found in 24 (62%) patients, and HLA-DQB1 *0201 allele was seen in 17 (44%) patients; no patients with the DQB1 *0201/DQB1 *0301 genotype had severe pneumonitis. However, patients carrying this allele experienced pneumonitis only 2.4+/-1.3 times more often than the patients who had the other genotype (p=0.07). Aspecific pneumonitis appeared to be the main cause of severe ranitidine-induced pneumonitis. However, those patients who carried the HLA-DQB1 *0201 allele had pneumonitis 2.4 times more often than those who had the other allele. We conclude that DQB1 *0201 allele was not a predisposing factor for ranitidine-induced acute pneumonitis./ * Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation (ASF) under one * or more contributor license agreements.
