for transgender people will have a slice of the public health pie when the first state-by-state tally of transgender people is released. The U.S. Census Bureau will count about 1,000 transgender people for the first time in the 2020 census, which is being taken April 1-May 31.

But no one knows how many transgender people there are. "When we do the count, it will be the first time we have this information in any reliable way," said Roger Severino, director of the Office of Policy at the U.S.

Department of Health and Human Services. "This will be an important milestone on the march to full recognition of transgender people," said Mara Keisling, founding executive director of the National Center for Transgender Equality.

Instead of asking, "Do you identify as male or female?" the 2020 census will ask, "What is your gender?" Keisling said she's "really excited" to get a count of transgender people in the states. She notes that some of the gains the transgender community has made over the last decade can be directly traced to this census data.

During the 2010 census, she said, transgender people in the U.S. were identified as being at the "same facility" as their birth sex. But if, like many transgender people, they had undergone gender reassignment surgery, they were excluded. So, for the first time, Keisling said, the census will count people who identify as transgender. In the last two decades, transgender rights have come a long way. Since the "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" law was repealed in 2011, transgender people have won the right to serve openly in the military. In addition, medical practitioners can now write that transgender people are the opposite sex without fear of criminal charges. "There has been a lot of social progress," Keisling said. "We do have a long way to go, but we have made a lot of progress. And this census will provide us with a road map." In response to the first iteration of the census data, the U.S. Transgender Survey released in 2016 found that nationally transgender people were in the midst of a public health crisis, in a far worse position than in the past. Of the 362,454 transgender people surveyed, 68 percent had attempted suicide. A third of transgender people reported
