The facebook sdk is used (version 4) and the app is configured with oauth2 and express-session. We only need to ask people to login once to continue using the app. As the app and the user base have grown the lifetime of the access token has increased. This works fine, until we try to access data more than 60 days into the future with the update access token function. If I call for more than 60 days into the future, I get the error: { "error": "invalid_grant", "error_description": "The provided authorization code or access token expires too soon. Please retry after some time." } I can however make api calls to the API for under 60 days without issue. For our needs, we need to be able to make calls for up to 365 days without issue. I've done a bit of poking around through the sdk, but I've only been able to find basic examples. If anyone has any idea on how to make this work that would be appreciated. A: Unfortunately, the access tokens generated by the Facebook SDK are not valid beyond 60 days. This includes the express-session token. However, there are a couple of workarounds. You can send a refresh token to your users, and then generate a new access token using this refresh token. To do this, you can use the /accounts/{ACCOUNT-ID}/oauth/access_tokens endpoint, which will generate a new access token for the given account. You can then send a POST request with this new access token to the /me/accounts endpoint to retrieve the id of the user's account. You can use this to retrieve the refresh token associated with this account. Example: POST

None had served longer than a year before they were replaced. On at least 12 occasions, the commissioners changed the scheduling order, resulting in the dismissal of their intended successor.Â . The petition alleged that the five-member commission had appointed a certain person to be its chairman, but he had at least some motive to select his own candidate for this position, since he would be in line to be appointed as the new chairman if the commission had done so. The board then applied to the High Court to restrain the commission from continuing. Given that

Â©Â£2 million was involved, the High Court found that in Â§114 of the 1985 Act, the relevant provision in effect provided that, in the absence of special reasons to the contrary, an employment tribunal would be free to award expenses, including expert fees, of the equivalent of no more than a Â£3,000 in a written decision. The case concerned a claim that Â£2,880 had been paid to the respondent as a retainer for costs in the proceedings against him in the Employment Appeals Tribunal.Â . The Court of Appeal upheld the lower courtâ€™s decision. The two points argued by the High Court were considered. The first was that the provision in question was invalid, because it was based on the old Â§155 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974 (UK), which set out the limit for expert fees in arbitration disputes at Â£3,000. In the opinion of the Â£3,000 was a maximum limit which was valid, but it was not restrictive in operation, and the provision did not violate the right to freedom of association (Â§1(2) of the Human Rights Act 1998). The second point was that if the provision was invalid, the disputed payment would be recoverable at the discretion of the tribunal, not as an application of the principle of Â§114 of the 1985 Act. In any event, the Court of Appeal held that the Â£2,880 was clearly disbursements and not costs as the respondent had contended (s. 3(9) of the 1985 Act). The Respondent appealed to the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom, which dismissed the appeal on 22 October 2004. It held that the provision was valid, because it was not significantly discriminatory and could be interpreted in such a way that it did not conflict with the Act (there was no conflict with
