Find out what's behind the hype in: Eight of the most popular ... Eight of the most popular movies in the UK right now are horror films, and that can only mean one thing: Halloween has come early. 2018 is looking like a bumper year for genre films, with over 40 horror films hitting cinemas this year, and another 40 hitting the big screen in October alone. The buzz is building: Doctor Sleep, Wreck It Ralph, Split, Green Room, Guardians of the Galaxy, Suspiria, Nocturnal Animals and It have been the UK's top grossing films this summer. Connie Nielsen starred as a housewife who is terrorised by a malevolent spirit in The Exorcist (1973) So much so that 2018 has been dubbed the 'Year of the Horror', with Friday the 13th, Saw and The Shining all released earlier this year. Even Netflix got in on the horror action with its Black Mirror episode Nosedive, and a new Channel 4 series, This is Horror, dedicated to the genre. Each film is a unique approach to the genre, with The Exorcist grounded in the horror of exorcism and Saw excelling at the set piece. This year's crop has been varied and enthralling, with The Nun, Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle, Jigsaw and A Quiet Place delivering tense moments and series finales. The fact that so many of the UK's top-grossing films are horror films only adds to the buzz. And all the success isn't just down to the films themselves: our TV channel, Sky One, has been working on an initiative called 'Horror Week', encouraging Sky customers to use their Sky Go app to watch horror films. The event ran from May 15 to 19

Thus, the CPU also operates in accordance with the instructions from the host CPU. It is well-known that the host CPU is able to operate the data processing apparatus in a multi-tasking manner so that respective tasks are executed simultaneously in the data processing apparatus. It is also known that the data processing apparatus is provided with a virtual memory. The virtual memory is used in order to increase the volume of the data processing apparatus. With the virtual memory, an address space comprising a plurality of addresses is assigned to the virtual memory as if the virtual memory were a plurality of physical memories. The address space is a range of data which the host CPU is able to access. The virtual memory is formed from the address space and is generally provided with a plurality of pages. With the virtual memory, the host CPU is able to access the data. However, the page accessed by the host CPU is merely data which has been previously stored in the virtual memory. The page is held by the virtual memory and is not held by any physical memory. In some cases, a plurality of virtual memories are formed from the pages in order to increase the volume of the data processing apparatus. In the data processing apparatus having the virtual memory, the data processing apparatus is able to execute a plurality of tasks in order to increase the volume of the data processing apparatus. However, the data processing apparatus is able to access only one page as the data. Therefore, if the host CPU updates the accessed page and issues an instruction to the data processing apparatus, the data processing apparatus cannot access the page in the virtual memory. Further, with the virtual memory, when the host CPU executes an instruction in order to update the accessed page and issues the instruction to the data processing apparatus, the host CPU is able to access the data. However, the instruction issued by the host CPU is merely a control signal of the data processing apparatus. The instruction is not able to access the page in the virtual memory. Thus, with the data processing apparatus having the virtual memory, if the host CPU
