PS Elements is still excellent for simple, powerful picture editing and manipulation. Features are outlined below, and you can find a detailed comparison to Photoshop in the table. What's new: Version 10 introduces InDesign Matching to help you eliminate the need to resize logos and photos when creating a document with Matching. It also includes the new Matching tools in both the Expert and Express editions. Matching: Matching allows you to quickly match parts of an image to the contents of an InDesign document. Elements uses SIFT (Scale-Invariant Feature Transform) to detect and match shapes and objects in an image. You can choose to keep the original image in the image window or display the matching image in the same image window. The selected images can be stored as an EPS (Encapsulated PostScript) file or displayed as an InDesign graphic object on the page of the InDesign document. A new method to match multiple images is available in this version. After selecting the "Select Rectangle Tool" and creating a rectangular selection, click on the new "Matching Selections" button (the circled arrow) to start the process. The tool will highlight any objects that are nearby the rectangle and then draw a new selection around the objects. Works with: PS CS6, CC 2014, CC 2015, CC 2016, CC 2017, CC 2018, CC 2019 Additional photo editing features have been added to the Edit Menu in addition to the existing features listed above. UC Berkeley's College of Chemistry recently received a major infrastructure upgrade thanks to a $1.2 million gift from Apple co-founder Steve Wozniak. Wozniak gave the gift to support the new initiative known as the WozLife Center, which will provide hands-on research experiences to undergraduate and graduate students in the College of Chemistry. "The WozLife Center is designed to elevate the research experience to a new level, giving students a chance to do hands-on research, learn about science in general and really get their hands dirty," said Mark Hickman, UC Berkeley's provost and executive vice chancellor. "Steve Wozniak and his family are investing in UC Berkeley to train leaders and inventors." "The premise is that if you are engaged in a hands-on, innovative experience, you will be more prepared for future advancement in science, technology and business," said Joanne Gabrynowicz, senior associate dean of the College of Chemistry and associate provost for student affairs. One of the first activities planned for the new center is a hackathon, which will give students the opportunity to go beyond what is already being taught in chemistry classes and develop a new product or process. WozLife will also provide more opportunities for students to present their research to peers, and it will serve as a "hub" of sorts for student research. "This is an investment in students for students," said Shelby Ellis, the Solomon Orr '63 Professor in Chemistry and director of the WozLife Center. "We want to empower students to be scientists and develop the tools to make that happen." At present, the main science labs at UC Berkeley are outdated and need renovations. For a few years, the College of Chemistry has been renting its own space in the Morry Yagoda Neuroscience Center to meet teaching and research needs. "We see the need to take some ownership of the labs," said Nick Hauff, the David Packard Professor and director of the Sustainable Futures Program. Hauff said the new labs will be sustainable for a long time. "From a cost standpoint, the new labs will be dramatically less expensive than the ones we are already renting in the Neuroscience Center," he said. "From an impact on student learning, the new labs will
