 Roblox is a massively popular online virtual sandbox video game, and is well known for enabling its users to create custom games, games that they can play locally at home, or that they can play online with friends. Users create their own games and players use a Roblox avatar to play. Games for Roblox are created using a programming language called Lua, and many of them are graphically-interactive and playable with touch screen devices, such as tablets and smartphones. Unlike other web-based games, Roblox games are created using a drag and drop interface, with most games including both visual and sound elements. The platform includes a variety of games, such as adventure, racing, and fighting games. However, over half of all games on Roblox are social, non-violent games that are played with people in the same room, while others are role-playing or virtual world games. Many Roblox games are built on top of the LOVE framework, which allows more complicated games to be made using graphical programming. As of August 2020, nearly 4.7 billion games have been created on Roblox, making it the third most popular game creation platform after Unity and Game Maker. * GAMEPLAY * Roblox offers a number of gameplay options for those who play on their own or with friends: * Sandbox & Social: Users create their own games and invite friends to play them. * Create-Your-Own-World (CYOW): Users can create their own fully-scripted, graphically-interactive world with some limited capability to interact with other users. * Limited-Interaction (LIMI): Users play games hosted by the platform in a limited-interaction or text-based environment. * Play-With-Friends: Users play games hosted by the platform in a limited-interaction or text-based environment with other people, either online with others, or offline with one another. * Invite-Friends: Users can invite friends to play and build games on Roblox. * LOVE 2.0 Features of LOVE 2.0 are: - Game objects are part of a hierarchy that can be rearranged - Game objects are synchronized in real-time and update their state automatically - Game objects are focusable, clickable, and draggable - Game objects can receive input from

I was recently contacted by an individual who said he had come across my "Dear U" column, and was intrigued with the response to my musings. As such, I am going to open the column up to everyone who wants to contribute. All you have to do is send me anything that you feel might relate to the philosophy I've outlined. You can send what you'd like me to address, like a mention of something in the column, something you learned, etc. Basically anything that you think might be a jumping off point for discussion. All I ask is that you send them to me in an e-mail, because I'm not getting enough e-mail. Feel free to send off a barrage of messages, and I'll see what I can do with it. The rest of this will explain how and why I'm willing to accept submissions. Now, what I want you to try to keep in mind is that this is a room of individual people with their own connections, and, thus, their own experiences. So, while it is helpful to have strong opinions, if you don't have any, it's okay. You shouldn't feel the need to bring that up just because you sent me a picture of a frisbee (it's okay, we all do it.) On to the lesson! I started off last week's column like this: A few weeks ago, I pondered the question, "What would be the most satisfying act?" Of course, the first thing that came to mind is "sleep," but that seems a bit too obvious. The question has been asked before,
