Ammo is the short form of Ammunition. 7mm-08 Remington is a rifle cartridge that is almost an exact copy of the Wildcat cartridge known as the 7mm / 308 launched around 1958. As its name suggests, the .308 Winchester case is slightly longer and strangled to accommodate a 7mm bullet (.284).

The 7mm-08 Ammo can use the full range of 7mm bullets, from short, fragile 100-grain hollow points designed for troubling wild animals to 120-, 140- & 150- grain bullets. It can handle deer and similar-sized games, even heavier 160 and 175-grain projectiles that remove moose, elks, and black bears.

7mm Vs a 7mm-08

Although they are of the same caliber but differ in case capacity and muzzle velocity. If you require greater velocity and don't serious about recoil, then the 7mm Rummage is for you. If there is a need for reduced recoil and to make the rifle lighter, the 7mm-08 would be a better choice. People prefer accurate weapons.

How is 7mm-08 Ammo advantageous for hunting?

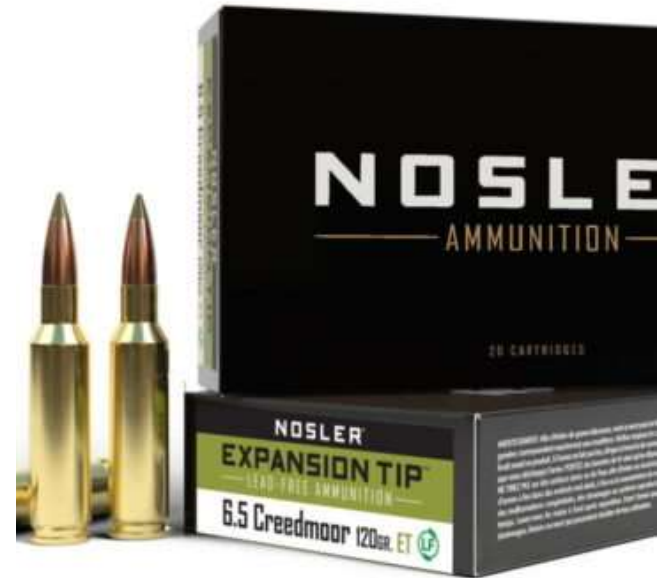

The 7mm-08 Ammo has a high demand for elk hunting. As there are several benefits along with reduced recoil and light short action, this cartridge would check every box. The 7mm-08 is the best wildcat cartridge of the .308. Since the launching of the .308 cartridge, the ammunition manufacturers have miniaturized their cases to form a variety of wildcat cartridges. 7mm-08 is the result of this process.

Necking down - It involves the reduction of the diameter of the cartridge case from its neck so that it can fire small diameter bullets. This is done to speed up the projectile.

The 7mm-08 uses the famous .308 cartridge and is combined with the popular 7mm bullet caliber. As there is a combination of short action cartridges & high ballistic coefficient bullets, this combination has emerged highly successful in the hunting industry, particularly in the backcountry world.

As there is a renewed interest in backcountry elk hunting, the hunters are looking for the ideal cartridge to complete their equipment. Though 7mm-08 is not so popular these days, it turns out to be ideal for elk hunting. Mild recoil and abundant bullet selection provide it with several benefits. The 7mm-08 is a short action cartridge which means you will not move the bolts too far to eject the used brass. In this case, less metal is used in machining which leads to lighter action. From their own experience, many hunters have learned that lightweight rifle is convenient to carry.
